Follow the recommended sequence to harvest garlic. One, ready to harvest. Two, gently lift with fork, careful not to bruise the bulbs. /Submitted by Debbie Barnhart

How to harvest your garlic

Garlic Festival returns Aug. 28

DEBBIE BARNHART

Haliburton County Master Gardener

THE HARVEST is the most important activity in the garlic growing cycle, but is frequently pulled hastily from the ground, badly cleaned and cured, wasting the expense and effort put into growing it. Have your plan of what you want to do with it at harvest time.

Garlic is ready to be lifted (harvested) between the first week of July through to mid-August.

When are the bulbs ready? Too early will give you undersized bulbs that don't store well. A few days too late will result in bulbs lacking the protective wrappers around the cloves. For most cultivars, the window is only three to seven days. For hardneck garlic, which is grown in Haliburton County, the leaves start to die from the bottom up. When the bottom three or four leaves are dead and the top five or six are still green dig a bulb or two and check. If they are fully filled with tight wrappers, start the harvest.

Harvest steps

1. Pick a dry day for harvesting.
2. Carefully lift the bulbs with a garden fork. Take the greens and all, for cleaning and curing.
3. Handle garlic like eggs, it is very fragile and should not be bumped, bounced or dropped. Bruising garlic will cause early decay and loss of quality.
4. Move it quickly to a shady spot for cleaning and washing. Spray wash as soon as possible after lifting, do not let the wrappers dry out before cleaning.
5. Remove any diseased or damaged bulbs (use or process first).
6. Curing is the completion of the maturation process by which the bulb continues to draw nutrients from the remaining green leaves. Garlic needs about two weeks to cure in order to prepare it for winter storage.
7. Either hang it in bundles of 10 to 12 from beams, rafters, frames, etc., or place on mesh racks in an airy, ventilated drying space. Out of the sun and weather. Humid or wet conditions may require having fans to circulate the air to prevent mold growth.

Storage

Fully cured garlic for home use may be left on the stalk, braided and hung in a cool, dry space, out of direct sunlight or in a paper bag in bulb form.

Fully cured garlic for market is trimmed to remove stalks, leaving about a ½" of stem and separated in layers in airy containers and taken to storage or market.

Best storage temperatures are cool room temperature 60 to 70 Degrees F at low humidity. A cold room in the basement is suitable for home gardeners with some hung in the kitchen for daily use.

NEVER store garlic in the refrigerator. Temperatures of 40 to 50 Degrees F will start premature growth. What's next? Celebrate!

The garlic festival is coming back! Join us at Abbey Gardens from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Sunday, Aug. 28. Abundance of great garlic, presentations, food, classic cars, artisan vendors, brewery, live music and much more! Watch for a 14 day countdown to all things garlic and you will see that garlic truly goes with everything! See abbeygardens.ca/garlicfestival for more information.

Canoe Trip Report –Kennisis Lake to Avrey Lake H.H.W.T area (Frost Centre)2022 August long weekend

I have been leading an initiative at the KLCOA (Kennesis Lake Cottagers' Association) designed to preserve and protect traditional rights of way (or portages) to ensure canoeist, kayakers and even paddleboarders are able to travel freely between lakes and rivers in our area. Some of these traditional portages date back centuries. Before European arrivals, a variety of Indigenous peoples, particularly the Chippewa and Ojibwa regularly travelled this area. Many portages in the area are noted in the original surveyors' reports (Havelock 1862 Surveyor Notes). These surveys were made before the Crown grant was made. The KLCOA, TROW (Traditional Rights of Way) Committee has collected many of these surveyors' reports because they help support the Public Lands Act recognition of the right of portage.

We are very fortunate here on Kennisis Lake to be able to access some beautiful backcountry canoe routes right from our docks. One of southern Ontario's most accessible paddling areas is very close. This trip report illustrates a wonderful combination of large and small lakes and rivers that makes this area ideal for canoeing and kayaking. There are numerous day trip and overnight possibilities. This short report provides an example of just one possible trip you could undertake.

On Saturday, July 30 a group of six set off for Avery Lake in the H.H.W.T. (Haliburton Highlands Water Trails) area. Our group consisted of my two daughters, their boyfriends and my wife and myself. We left from our dock around 8:45 a.m. and travelled to Cat Lake on Kennisis, over the Cat Lake Portage (640 metres) across Cat Lake and then a 980 metre portage into Little Hawk Lake. From Little Hawk our group paddled up through "The Gap" into Big Hawk Lake, then through a series of small lakes (Noname Lake and Summit Pond) and three portages into beautiful Sherborne Lake. From Sherborne we continued north to Sundew Pond and finally to Little Avrey Lake, but not before tackling a tough 530 metre portage we needed to conquer before Little Avrey and our first night campsite.

Little Avery Lake is a nice little lake, with a middle of nowhere feel and some big cliff faces on one side. In total, day one was the toughest of the trip with seven portages, but well worth it. At night we heard wolves howling, an owl hooting and enjoyed an amazing starry night.

Day two we were on the water by around 10:30 a.m., back over the tough 530 metre portage to Sundew Pond and then back through Sherborne Lake, Big Hawk via a pretty easy 1080 metre portage and then on to beautiful Clear Lake within the Clear Lake Conservation Reserve. This Reserve features old growth Eastern Hemlock, a pure population of redbelly dace and a miromictic lake (Black Cat Lake). Clear Lake is a beautiful aquamarine blue and a gorgeous place to spend the night.

Day three consisted of a few hours of paddling across Clear Lake, Red Pine Lake, up the Kennisis River, across the dam on Kennisis and then home to the cottage over a choppy and windy Kennisis (what else is new). The whole trip consisted of 40 kilometres of paddling and about five kilometres of portaging, if you don't include extra trips on the portage. We had a great time.

If you are just starting out canoe tripping or considering your first overnight canoe trip, you don't need to make it as long or difficult. You could go into Red Pine Lake from Kennisis Lake and spend a night at one of the nice campsites there, the only portaging would involve a short trip around Kennisis Lake Dam and on into the Kennisis River. Another option could be a night camping on beautiful Cat Lake with a nice 640 metre portage and from there it's only 240 metre into very special Clear Lake, there are multiple possibilities.

If you are interested in camping in the H.H.W.T. area, you can make reservations starting Feb. 1 each year by phone (1-866-364-4498) or online at secure.camis.com/HHWT/.

Get out and enjoy!

KLCOA, Lead on TROW Project

Author Gino Ariano recently embarked on a canoe trip with family during the past Civic Holiday to retrace a portage route used by Indigenous peoples, as part of his efforts with the Traditional Rights of Way project. The project's goal is to preserve and protect portage routes in the area. Ariano reports many of these routes are under threat by development pressure. /Submitted by Gino Ariano

Take note of the magic in music

Music is the universal language of humanity, and where there is music, there is magic in the form of health benefits and unity.

Music has been woven into the fabric of who we have been for tens of thousands of years.

Scientists have found musical instruments, like flutes made of bone, created by humans 40,000 years ago.

This was around the same time that all physical evidence of Neanderthals vanished, and "modern humans" migrated and settled throughout different regions of the world.

VIVIAN COLLINGS
County Life Staff

Coincidence?

Some scientists believe music could have helped these early-modern humans outsurvive Neanderthals.

But, how?

If you or I had lived 40,000 years ago, we might think we would've been more concerned about building a shelter, finding food to eat, staying warm, avoiding predators, and trying not to die, and less concerned about bopping along to a tune (I don't know what kind of tunes were popular in 38,000 BCE, so for illustrative purposes, I'm imagining a rendition of Gimme Shelter by the Rolling Stones, appropriately).

But, among trying to survive, these humans found purpose in making music.

We can't ask them why, but we can imagine their purpose for making and hearing music is similar to ours today.

Music can encourage connection, strengthen communities, and improve memory through the release of neurochemicals like dopamine, serotonin, and oxytocin, also known as the happy hormones.

Do you ever put your favourite music on to cheer up or get an energy boost?

Every morning, I put in my headphones while I get ready for the day. It doesn't matter what mood I'm in when I wake up, because I can always count on ABBA to make me feel like I'm dancing on a Grecian island.

Healthline also says that listening to music can help promote heart health by altering the listener's breath rate, heart rate, and blood pressure.

Music therapists use music to help manage pain in patients as endorphins are released and focus is taken away from suffering. It can improve mental health by lowering anxiety.

Maybe, this is how humans persisted as the dominant race and Neanderthals ceased to exist.

Some research even suggests that music is in our genes. A nature.com study of 39 African cultures found those who sing alike are genetically similar.

Recently, music therapy is being used for patients with dementia. Procedural memory includes activities such as knowing how to throw a ball, dance, and ride a bike. Explicit memory holds knowledge of events and reasoning. This is what disappears as dementia gets worse.

Favourite songs, how to sing, and how to play an instrument, scientists have found, lie in a person's procedural memory.

It can't be forgotten, which would also explain why I can remember all of the words to We Didn't Start the Fire by Billy Joel but not what I had for breakfast yesterday.

For those with dementia, listening to music can decrease agitation and can even improve cognitive processes.

These benefits aren't found in just one group of people. If you are human, you can experience the magic of music.

Perhaps, music can be used more often in group settings to benefit universal problems.

I would've liked to have been in the crowd at Wembley Stadium for Live Aid while Freddie Mercury belted out Bohemian Rhapsody.

You can feel the collective energy and emotion from both the musicians and the crowd, even through a screen while watching the concert on YouTube.

At this performance, Mercury captivated almost two million people who tuned in from around the world which helped raise $127 million for famine relief in Africa.

Can we use this knowledge of music to not only help ourselves, but to aid world issues through a collective, universal, magical experience?

These are just some of the things to ponder the next time you reach for your headphones or turn up the volume on your radio.

Top 10 reasons people have jets skis on tiny lakes

I'M NOT A fan of jet skis. But this is cottage country and many of our lakes are big enough to make jet skiing a fun power sport. So, I say if a jet ski is what makes you happy, have at it.

Having said that, I have never understood why people have jet skis on our smaller lakes. So, instead of judging, I gave it some thought. Here are the top 10 reasons I came up with.

STEVE GALEA
Humour Columnist

1. The owner likes being on the water but has an irrational fear of being caught by snapping turtles.
2. Who wants to paddle for five minutes to get to the other end of a lake?
3. Some people are just uncomfortable with peace and quiet.
4. Going very fast in endless circles makes a person feel alive.
5. Sure, it's a small lake now, but if the shoreline is eroded enough, one day it will be a big one.
6. A jet ski allows you to get to the washroom quicker when nature calls.
7. Yelling "Woo hoo!" from a canoe just sounds silly.
8. Some people just like to make waves.
9. Strongly opposes the neighbours' mid-day naps.
10. Almost impossible for a swamped canoe to catch.

Silence

Silence loud as clouds,
shrouding the shrine of pines,
their spines stretching towards August Sky, slants of light sliding through the clouds, pooling on the forest floor,
the pine needles, soft as moss, as my bare feet pad across them, towards the stone bench that rests beneath the pillars of pines,
the coolness of Air as it trickles through the trees,
their branches swaying like hands listening to a hymn.
I sit and listen to the creaks of the forest, a chipmunk that streaks between the trees, the cawing of a crow before it retreats into silence again.
I gawk up at the tops of pines, seeming taller each time I return, to retrieve something I've lost in the clutter of my thoughts, the stillness of the boulders that bulge from the forest floor, squatting amongst the pines.
I rise to rumple their shoulders, cloaked in the fur of moss, the green not as neon as it was back in spring, a richer shade now, as summer ripens, Sky dimming, earlier than it did last week.
I walk back towards the pines, feeling light filter through their branches, some of them growing so close together, their branches overlapping,
and I wonder whether their roots overlap too,
as they weave through the labyrinth of underground.
The sound of rustling, startles me, as I glimpse the doe bolt between the trees, disappearing into the tangle of forest beyond the pines.
I peer after the copper smear of deer, my feet frozen on the forest floor, as if my silent pleas will bring it back to forage around the pines,
these fleeting glimpses as it flees,
always, somehow, sacred to me, the stillness it leaves behind,
like when Sun drips into the hills, bleeding into the trees,
or when a heron lands in the reeds, its wings scissoring through the mist as it leaves, these moments slowing my Heart as it drinks in what it sees.
I walk back towards the stone bench,
to sit amongst the pines for a while longer, wondering who erected it, whether I'm trespassing across a patch of private forest, or whether the bench was placed here to rest amongst the trees for free.
I peer up at the pines, their spines stretching towards August Sky,
their branches reaching for the light,
as it slides through the clouds,
cloaking the forest in a silence, soft as moss,
deep as the roots of trees,
listening to earth breathe.

Retreat

Seagulls' wings slicing through layers
of Air, thick as fur,
their screeches luring me towards the water's edge,
branches drooping towards the Lake,
reaching for a sip.
My feet slip onto the ledge of rocks,
heat seeping into their soles,
as I peer out at the island of pines,
their spines stiffened by Wind, ringed by rocks that appear small as pebbles,
from where I stand,
listening to the squawks of gulls flapping past, daring me to dive in.
My feet remain rooted to the rocks,
my eyes squinting at the squiggles of
pines,
guardians of the tiny island where I seek retreat beneath their branches,
the fragrance of pine needles tickling my nostrils as my body remembers the feeling of loosening,
my mind, the freedom of thoughts
sloughed away by Wind, only the bowl
of Sky above me,
pouring its vastness into me,
as I lay splayed like a starfish beneath the pines, listening to the water slurp
the rocks,
a feeling of being small as a pebble, washing over me, as Sun drenches my flesh, Wind empties me,
Sky, always up there, canopying me, as I lay beneath the pines, oblivious to time, only the rhythm of my Breath, warmed by breeze.
My toes squirm on the ledge of rocks,
as uncertainty swirls in my head, I listen
to my body instead,
as I plunge into the silk of Lake, its coolness enveloping me,
the paddles of my hands and the fins of my feet propelling me forward, underwater, eyes squeezed shut, holding my Breath 'till it wants to burst out of my chest,
resurfacing beneath a mottled Sky,
Sun peeking out behind a bank of clouds,
as I flip onto my back, the gulls goading me on,
whip-kicking and floating, feeling weightless and solid at the same time,
as I breaststroke towards the island of
pines,
my hands slicing through the folds of water, the flippers of my feet, kicking and gliding, slippery as a fish,
not a thought brewing in my head,
feeling the strength of my body instead,
the stiffness loosening as the Lake cradles and soothes, each stroke bringing me closer to the pines, their spines stretching longer, the rocks looming larger than a hundred breaststrokes ago,
as I lunge towards them, dripping,
part of me still underwater, as I stumble
towards the pines,
my legs, limp as seaweed, the bowl of Sky spilling its light onto me, as I greet
my summer friends,
slumping against one of their spines,
inhaling the fragrance of breeze,
Sun stroking my limbs and cheeks, as I lie still as a pebble beneath the pines, feeling empty and full at the same time.

In the village

There are poets in the village
Watching skies and seasons shift
Some write rhymers, some meander
Still we readers catch their drift

Words are used to try and mirror
Miracles of sense and soul
When a poet forms a pattern
Fragments merge to make it whole

Like a baker with a game plan
Knowing that from pieces come Finished products mixed from feelings
Rising fragrant, crumb by crumb.

LAURIE JONES
Curator, Rails End Gallery and Arts Centre

The Rails End Craft Circle's first outdoor meet up of 2022. Submitted by Laurie Jones

My paternal grandmother, Bertha, showed me how to "hook" when I was a girl.

Her canvas was the same burlap used to protect a bush in winter; her colour palette was strips of old T-shirts and cast-offs. Her hook was a modified latch-hook. I think she "hooked" me in by asking me to cut up the material with a pair of left-handed scissors!

Trivets were about my speed. Nana's projects were more ambitious freestyle interpretations of scenes that caught her artist's eye. They were works of art. I treasure them.

Aunt Rebecca made the appliqued quilt I dreamed under as a child. Years later I learned the pattern dated back to Bertha Corbett's 1900 book The Sunbonnet Babies and to American embroiderers who took their cue from her illustrations. (The pastel bonnets look straight out of a Kate Greenaway story book that probably crossed "the Pond" before the railway came to the Highlands!) I am grateful to have learned a smattering of stitchery from my elders when I was a child.

My maternal Aunt Elda knit a sweater for each of us six children every winter. It seemed natural, then, for me to start a tiny sweater when I learned I was to be a Gramma. (My grandchild is 15 months old and I have yet to finish the sleeves!) My interest in needle crafts started young and, although I have not progressed to finished products, I remain drawn. I admire the focus, the planning, and the careful execution that goes into needle craft. Especially knitting. When I see creative local artists like Kim McBrien-Evans, of Indigodragonfly, developing patterns and advocating for a fashion world that fits all, or Rails End Craft Circle helping baby critters by knitting tiny nests, I get all tingly and feel my time to take up the needles is coming! In fact - it might be HERE!

Last week, Susanne James and Norma Bingham, knitting mavens with a gift for sharing, pitched a great idea. It's called "Each One, Teach One" and the aim is to get the ball rolling and the needles knitting by coaching new knitters! So, if you always wanted to knit, or never had time, or had no one to show you - this is for you! Your "Knit Coaches" will be waiting for you …

When: Rails End Gallery and Arts Centre, starting the first Wednesday in September through December from 2:30 - 4:30 p.m. Drop an email to info@railsendgallery.com to get on the email list, or just show up ready to learn.

"A pretty painted turtle through the reeds" in Algonquin Highlands. Submitted by Tammy Nash

Monarch on a flower. Submitted by Ray Kidon

Area photographer Tammy Nash said she saw a "cub running to catch up with Momma and I noticed the string at the end of the cub, which would mean it's a girl cub as they have what they call a pee string. (Now this is what I was told, anyways, cute.)" Nash caputred the scene in Algonquin Highlands.

Darren Lum/TIMES

By 5:30 on Friday night the Ultramar station on Highway 35 had run out of regular and premium gas after streams of cars poured into the county from neighbouring areas to fill up. Luckily, 55,000 litres were delivered later that night keeping Dean Grozelle busy at the pumps.

Blackout fuels buying spree

Long lines snake towards local gas stations... and beer store

by ERIN TENNANT
Times staff

Minden gas stations enjoyed booming pump sales on Friday as commuters scrambling for fuel swooped on the handful of gas bars in Haliburton County where electricity was still running.

As Ontario suffered its worst blackout since 1965, the Highlands was – mysteriously - an island of resilienc , with the region's power grid showing no signs of foundering.

As gas stations throughout the province were forced to shut down services for lack of electricity to pump fuel, drivers from surrounding counties made a dash for Minden and Haliburton, hoping to collect fuel to survive an outage which – at least until just after midday on Friday - gave little indication of ending soon.

The queues were unprecedented at Minden's two major gas stations on Highway 35, with lines of 40 cars or more crowding the garage tarmac and flowing out onto the outside lane of the two-lane highway.

It took half an hour after the province-wide outage struck – at about 4:30 pm on Thursday afternoon – before sedans and SUVs began pouring in for gasoline at 72.9 cents/L for Regular, and station attendants began bustling to meet the relentless demand. Many drivers, either collecting supplies for stranded friends or just preparing for the worst-case scenario, packed jerry cans for stock up on extra fuel. At times, tempers would flare in the 29° heat as drivers jostling
